Seed Spud Treatment Means Crop Insurance

By treating their seed potatoes sometime between now and planting time, Kentucky farmers will be practicing crop insurance and preventing soil infection from common scab, rhizoctonia or "black scurf" and "black leg," according to a statement which has been issued by Dr. W. D. Valleau, plant pathologist of the State College of Agriculture. Corrosive sublimate treatment, the standard method of which is given in Dr. Valleau's statement, is the most satisfactory method of controlling these potato seed pests.

The standard solution of corrosive sublimate used in the treatment is made by dissolving four ounces of the material in a few gallons of hot water and then diluting the solution to 30 gallons. This solution may be used for treating four lots of potatoes but different lengths of time are necessary if the material is used more than once.

The standard length of treatment is one hour for the first time, one and one-quarter hours for the second time, one and one-half hours for the third time and two hours for the fourth and last time.

Seed potatoes may be treated any time during the winter preferably during the period that they are dormant. The treatment must be applied before the seeds are out for planting. Rotted or scabby potatoes should not be treated or used for seed.

Since the corrosive sublimate corrodes metal only wooden, concrete or some non-metal, container should be used with the solution.

Alkaline soils which have produced scabby potatoes before are particularly adapted to carrying the scab from one year to another. Seed treatment under such conditions will not control the scab. It will, however, prevent scab from entering alkaline soils if it is not already present.

A Good Medicine for the Whole Family

Foley's Honey and Tar is a powerful combination of carefully selected remedies that experience proves loosens and breaks up a cough in short order.

Feels Like a New Man Now

Joe Edwards, 26, Harlan St., Montgomery, Ala., writes: "I had a very bad cold and cough and I was very weak. I had been using many remedies but nothing seemed to help. I had heard of Foley's Honey and Tar and I bought a bottle. I used it as directed and in a few days I was feeling much better. I was able to get out and about and I was able to do my work. I feel like a new man now. I am very grateful to you for your medicine."

Uncle Walt's Story

THE DIFFERENCE

"I SAW you coming up the street and standing at the gate with Mr. Honeybug and Mr. Playfair," said Mrs. Jamesworthy. "All three of you were laughing so the whole neighborhood could hear you. I wonder why you do all the laughing with your friends, and do nothing but grumble and scowl at home. I haven't seen you laugh in the house in five years, as you laughed out there with those men."

"There's nothing in this house to laugh at," replied Jamesworthy. "Jim Honeybug is a good story-teller, and he was telling us a bully yarn, and for a brief season we forgot the burdens laid upon us, which are greater than we can bear. If you could tell a story as well as Honeybug does, I'd fill these ancestral halls with silvery laughter, but you never try to say anything amusing, Mrs. Jamesworthy. You do tell stories, but they are of a gloomy and tragic character."

"Last night, when I came home, you told a dramatic story to the effect that you had callers all afternoon, and hadn't a chance to cook anything for me, and so I had to eat canned salmon and soda crackers, and wash them down with water, and I insist that when a husband comes home from his arduous labors in the clanging mart, so empty that his watch chain makes a clanking sound when it flaps against his spine, he should have warm victuals, something he can consume with pleasure and pride. The fact that you had an invasion of callers is a cheap excuse."

"My sainted mother never would have permitted any callers to interfere with her management of the cook-stove. She realized that her old man kept the shebang going, and that he should have the right of way. If any old hens happened to be in the house when grub time approached, my mother would request them, firmly but respectfully, to chase themselves, and if they didn't like it they could lump it. When my father came home from his work, the hay was always in the manger for him, and he never had to wait five minutes for a meal."

"The day before yesterday, when I came staggering home, faint and weary from my herculean efforts to make both ends meet, you told me another story. It was to the effect that you had been downtown sizing up a shipment of new spring hats, just received at the millinery foundry, and you were so interested you forgot the lapse of time, and didn't get home in time to cook anything. But you flashed a winning smile at me, and said it wouldn't take you ten minutes to warm up a can of beans, and there was some cold coffee left from breakfast, and you had plenty of smoked herrings on hand."

"Doubtless I should have burst forth into boisterous laughter over this entertaining anecdote, but somehow it didn't appeal to my sense of humor. I was so busy that day I hadn't time to eat anything at noon, and all the way home I was hoping you would have a porterhouse steak about three inches thick, and a raft of boiled potatoes, and perhaps a slab of mince pie as an epilogue."

"The day before that, when I came home as hollow as a bass drum, and fairly gnashing my teeth with hunger, you related a humorous story to the effect that your club didn't adjourn on time that afternoon, and you didn't get home until late, so I would have to get along with a picked-up supper. If I would be patient a few minutes, you said, to make the story seem more spicy, you would boil an egg for me, and there was cold corn bread in the cupboard."

"Such stories, Mrs. Jamesworthy, may seem highly amusing to an innocent bystander, and I have no doubt they would make a great hit if written up and printed in London Punch, but there is something wrong with my sense of humor, or I am at the wrong end of the stories. Anyhow, I can't gurgie over them as I do over Honeybug's yarns."
